Table compiled by The Spectator using data from Experian and the Electoral Commission

1. Sheffield Brightside's consumer profile is 72 % sub-prime. In other words 22957 out of 31815 households match Experian's sub-prime profile. This is primarily a measure of susceptibility to default (ie, households on the edge) therefore a more relevant pointer in the face of economic downturn.
2. The above data is NOT a record of actual sub-prime borrowers (which could only be assembled if every lender collaborated). This is a list of where people that match the sub-prime profile are likely to reside and, therefore, where sub-prime lenders are most likely to concentrate their target marketing.
3. Sub-prime profile is not someone on welfare, hence the poorest, most deprived constituencies are not at the top. A sub-prime borrower is more likely to, for example, had CCJ four or five years ago and be now , back on track with regular employment. But their credit history prevents them from obtaining mainstream credit. So sub-prime lenders may consider them a good bet to lend to. Also, our sub-prime market is designed for sub-prime lending - not targets for loan sharks. The loan sharks typically bite at the most deprived and vulnerable.
